'Twas the best of days 'twas the worst of days for Big Jim Chalmers. On one side he could divert attention to the Libs who are indeed self imploding and suggest the extreme right wingers in the country are bad news for all of us, but on the other side he couldn't escape the fact that inflation is up and a good portion of the fault lies with him and his mate Albo.

Chalmers blamed pretty much everyone and everything for the rise in the inflation rate except government spending that of course had nothing to do with it. No, Jim of course it didn't, I mean cost of living is our fault, energy prices up by 20% or more are our fault and that more people than ever work for the public service is all our fault, but hey thanks for everything none the less!

The Nats who are facing a leadership spill are coming to realise that they could all be out of a job come the next election. Given their primary vote is about as big as ants left foot the Nats are starting to look over at Auntie Pauline with googly eyes asking we you be nice to us?!

Scomo is back and he's not holding back and why should he? Tony Abbott doesn't care what the party he used to lead looks like in 2026 so why should Scomo? Scomo has suggested that all Muslim religious text should be translated into English or read in English so we can keep an ear on what they're up to. Now while it would indeed be a good idea to make sure those within the Muslim brotherhood are being held to account to suggest we should be having all Muslim texts in English is pushing it a bit too hard. But hey he's an ex liberal party PM so he doesn't care what anyone thinks, even his own party!

VicHealth the government backed initiative that helped people get fitter, quit smoking or just be healthier is gone as we know but now it's abolishment has come under the scrutiny of ex Lib MP Mark Birrell who has condemned the move. Needless to say Dr Incompetent, Jaclyn Symes has said times are different to Birrells era and she's right more heart attacks, more mental health issues, more suicides, more cancer and basically more death as a result of poor health so pfft who needs something like VicHealth in 2026?! It's so 90's!

The Pauline Hanson movie, 'A super progressives movie' has had its premier in Sydney to a standing ovation and of course to cancellations across Victoria. Don't be surprised if Labor really start turning up the heat on Pauline because they know how absolutely cooked they are if she does the impossible and gets anywhere near the Lodge!

And finally while the wokes are out saying the high temperatures of late are all about climate change two things for them...1) Weren't their renewables supposed to bring down power prices and 2) Why not fund the CFA to try and get the fires out before the loss of lives, homes and businesses?!

Now on with the Daily!

AI NOT FIT FOR PURPOSE IN RECRUITMENT

Faster more efficient...that's the idea of Ai in the recruitment space nowadays. It's supposed to help employers and recruiters find the best people quicker, to cut through the people who aren't suitable but is it really ready to be choosing who's in and who's out? As someone that picks people for jobs my answer is no.

Ai is an incredibly powerful thing. While it could indeed be terrifying it is still a man made tool and we do indeed need to make sure it doesn't destroy the world it's like rain man, it can do amazing things but it can't relate to people. For me I don't think we want it relating to people or even trying. We want to maintain real relationships both personally and professionally with actual humans not Ai bots or robots.

In the corporate world we know soul isn't something that serves people very well, so Ai recruitment works to a degree within that world, but in hospitality it's a massive no. Yes calling people is a pain in the arse. Yes having to sift through CV's is tedious but this is a people based industry, you need to talk to people directly to know if they're a good fit or not.

I'm sure there's some tech nerd in a basement somewhere teaching Ai to be more human but based on what? While Ai is self learning if their original parameters it's given are not starting out with a basic understanding of humanity or what it is to be human then how does it find the right people?

Here's an example...

A chef with five years experience goes to apply for a job online. They meet all the criteria of the job and are able to start immediately, cool. Another chef applies for the same job, this chef has one year less experience but has never been late, never missed a shift, is passionate about cooking and has read a number of books about how to be a better chef in the modern world. The Ai program will pick the first chef even though he's probably not as passionate about food and isn't as committed, he's applying because he needs a job whereas the other chef is a long term professional with huge passion for the industry.

Now yes the Ai parameters are up to the person who sets them but I guarantee the company looking for chefs will always miss out on the right people because they've handed their recruitment to a tech tool that's doesn't understand humans.

None of this is to say Ai can't and won't learn how to be empathetic but do we want to go there? Do we really want to hand over everything we are to something totally artificial and that has no soul? For me no, but I'm old and stuck in my ways.

ABC NATIONAL FORUM

So on the day the ABC drop the utter garbage that was the Tony Armstrong show 'Always was tonight' they announce a new programme called 'ABC National forum'. A programme hosted by David Speers that is aiming to be the middle ground and give everyone a say and you have to say what a joke.

The ABC likes to think it can have it every way it wants and suggest it's being current and edgy when really it's doing absolutely zero to support any of the causes it claims to represent. It's a poor voice for indigenous people, it is in no way an unbiased version of opinion and it has absolutely no right to be placing itself as the news organisation that can be the middle ground.

The ABC is unquestionably a left wing mouth piece for all that is woke leftist propaganda. It claims it's not biased but while Murdoch is of the right commercial world the ABC is the tax payer funded left wing version and it shouldn't be. The biggest issue with the ABC is that their management don't think there's an issue nor do they listen to any kind of criticism from people show suggest they're biased.

The ABC are out of touch and need to have better accountability for their programming and while it's been said before, if they're not prepared to take criticism and or advice it's time to defund it.

WHAT THE...?

Being the NFL nut I am how is former New England Patriots head coach Bill Belichick not a first round Hall of fame coach? That he wasn't voted into the Hall of Fame unanimously on his first opportunity reeks of a bitter and twisted voting system that doesn't vote impartially. If there was ever a bigger joke in the NFL I don't know what it is because this is indeed it!

Have a great day to all!
